

What if everything “they” have taught us – everything we have learned in life – is incomplete?

What if, not only is it incomplete, but the piece we are missing is critical, and may even be the most important part?

What if you could become a better at each of your roles in life - spouse, parent, friend, professional, worker, clergy member, and any other role – simply by learning this important missing piece of information?

What if you discovered that “they” failed to teach us this important missing piece of the puzzle, not due to some massive conspiracy; not due to us going to the wrong schools or classes; not due to neglect; not even intentionally? What if you discovered that one of the greatest secrets of successful living was never shared with you, quite simply, because “they” didn’t have the information available to them?

What if you realized that a simple set of “rules” could help you improve every relationship in your life, help you have more friends and stronger friendships, and help you minimize conflict?

In this important new and “one of a kind” training, Kerry O’Hallaron explores each of these questions and more. He lays out his findings in an easy-to-read, humorous, and uplifting format.

Can each of the above questions actually be true? You decide. O’Hallaron proposes that he has spent a lifetime both proving the existence of the problem, and developing this elegantly simple solution.

Read, enjoy, and use these important lessons as you learn a powerful, new yet time-tested approach to improving each interaction with everyone you encounter. You will be amazed how a few, subtle changes will craft a new, more influential, more charismatic, more likable, YOU!
